Linked Open Data in Dialogue

Linked Open Data allows research data to be linked and made interoperable, so that researchers can take full advantage of each other's work and build collaborative science together. The Humanities benefit greatly from joining the effort and bringing together research data in shared graphs, with the help of initiatives such as Geovistory. The aim of the event is to connect and critically discuss the processes and the different perspectives of Linked Open Data for the Humanities, based on experiences with Geovistory and other projects.
